Introduction The most basic operations in Photoshop are relatively simple. You can usually handle the more complicated tasks with just a couple of simple steps. The software has been around for a long time, so there's a lot of documentation about the various tools and functions of Photoshop. You may find that some of the functions are hidden. Simple Photo Manipulations The most basic Photoshop tools are the ones that most people learn first. Selecting objects You can select objects in a photo as well as individual pixels. You can use the Eye Dropper tool or the Magic Wand tool to select objects. If you select the Magic Wand tool, then you can change the type of selection by using the Tools options in the Tool Control Bar. You can select objects on any layer, even on the Background layer, if you want to make changes to all of the objects on the photo. You can select specific objects by using the Layer Masks. This function is described in the box on Selecting Specific Objects. You can copy and paste an object to place it in a new location, and move objects to change their position. Controlling the layer mask: The Background and foreground color of the layer mask can be set by using the Background Color and Foreground Color options in the Layer Control Bar. These settings appear in the Tool Options for the Layer mask. The background color of the layer mask allows you to color the areas that you want to leave black. Q: How do I alter the behavior of a UIBarButtonItem? This is what I have: UIBarButtonItem *cancel = [[UIBarButtonItem alloc] initWithTitle:@"Cancel" style:UIBarButtonItemStyleBordered target:self action:@selector(cancelPressed)]; The problem is that in iOS 7, the title of the cancel button (when in the simulator) is "Cancel". I've tried overriding the title in the subclassed UIBarButtonItem, and setting the title in the bar button item in the view controller (which is working on iOS 7): self.navigationItem.rightBarButtonItem = cancel; self.navigationItem.leftBarButtonItem = cancel; [cancel setTitle:@"Exit"]; This works great, the right bar button item changes title in the simulator, but my left bar button item looks like this in the simulator and in iOS 7: It seems that rightBarButtonItem is working fine, but leftBarButtonItem isn't taking into account that I've set the title, or otherwise setting it to it doesn't work. I've tried adding the rightBarButtonItem property to the view controller's view, and adding the title to the leftBarButtonItem. How can I get the behavior in iOS 7 (simulator and device) to be what I want, i.e., a cancel button with the title "Cancel"? A: I was able to replicate your problem, and found out that if you add the cancel to the navigation bar explicitly, it will be shown as expected, even if you defined your own custom bar button item, and then assigned it to the UINavigationItem's back and cancel bar buttons: self.navigationItem.leftBarButtonItem = cancel; However, if you do not define the UINavigationItem's leftBarButtonItem, and then assign the cancel to the navigation bar, it will still behave as expected. As long as you don't define a bar button item, the navigation bar will use the view controller's navigation bar items instead of the value of the navigation item's leftBarButtonItem property (and that's why it's behaving as expected, because you have defined a custom bar button item). To be specific, when you don't set the leftBar

From left, Dean Gardner, John Moye, and Stephen McNamar. (Photo: Courtesy of Dover Public Schools) It's not every day a student becomes a state representative. And, in the case of Dover resident Stephen McNamar, and his peers John Moye and Dean Gardner, it's even more rare. McNamar, Gardner, and Moye won election on May 3 to the Board of Education of Dover Public Schools, representing the entire city and each have an expectation of at least three to four years' service. McNamar, Gardner, and Moye are the first three millennials to serve on the Dover Public Schools Board. The trio's election in May came on the heels of the passing of 20-year veteran John Carbone. When Moye was first approached about running for the school board in 2016, he didn't know much about the role. "I thought, this sounds like it's not what I'm meant for," he said. But in talking with other board members, and being able to look at the district from a different perspective, Moye said he realized the district has "a lot of great things going for it." "I think the district has done a wonderful job of engaging younger generations," he said. "I just felt like it was a role I would enjoy and I'm glad I did." McNamar grew up in Dover and attended Dover schools until he graduated from high school. After that, he attended the University of Delaware. McNamar said he considered the school board position "something I would be interested in." When Carbone announced his resignation in February, he said he didn't want the position to go to "one of my kids' friends." Gardner received his first taste of the public school system when he began his high school years in the Dover Public School system as a student in the Ewing School. His family then moved to New Smyrna Beach, and he eventually graduated from New Smyrna Beach High School. His parents, who voted for him as a parent, both voted for him when he ran for the school board. He said his goal was to advocate for kids during the election, and get the best people to lead.
